THE OBVIOUS BASIS FOR TOP QUALITY PIGLET FEEDS

In order to attain the best results from a piglet feed the formula has to be adapted to the digestive capabilities of young piglets. During the first weeks of life piglets require adequate levels of dairy protein since the digestive system is tuned to the digestion of dairy products. In the weeks around weaning piglets require easily digestible protein and energy sources to enable optimal growth performance. After weaning the piglets have to switch smoothly to digesting vegetable protein sources. Feed composition is essential to minimize the risk of digestive disorders or other health disturbances.

Denkapijg Concentrates

Digestibility and safety are vital

In young piglets the production of stomach acid (HCl) is not yet at an adequate level. The pH level at which cereals and soy derivatives can be digested is considerably lower than the pH level for optimal digestion of dairy protein. Denkapijg concentrates stimulate digestibility due to the fact that they contain organic acids, which reduce pH in the stomach and have an antimicrobial effect against disease-causing (E. coli) bacteria in the gut. Furthermore added yeast cell components improve overall immunity in the intestines.

A well balanced product

Denkapijg concentrates have been enriched with all vitamins, minerals and trace elements in the right amounts, thus preventing deficiencies. They also contain the right and properly balanced quantities of essential amino acids lysine, methionine, cysteine, threonine and tryptophane. In this way the products provide the young piglet with all micro ingredients needed to ensure optimum growth and health.

Inclusion levels

Depending on the availability and quality of raw materials and of the type of feed formulated, the inclusion level of Denkapijg concentrates in the finished feed varies from 5 to 75%.
